

News!

$16.50 Serge Dresses
Reduced to $10

All sizes still left in this beautiful Dress of French serge or granite—Dresses that sold all season for $16.50—made with dainty lace vest, collar and cuffs; trimmed in Persian satin girdle, and draped skirt; numerous other styles; choice of black, new blue, grey, Copenhagen and brown; special to-day..... $10.00

Second Floor.

5-Place Ratine Dresses, $3.98.
One-fifth effects in color of light blue, cadet, white and tan; flat collar and cuffs; belt of contrasting shades; also fastening; fancy cut; all sizes; a splendid wash garment for house, porch or street wear; special to-day..... $3.98

Basement.

WOMEN'S DUSTER COATS $1.50
For Auto or Travel
Linen Dusters; 55 inches long; suitable for auto wear; collar can be worn open or closed; some have large pockets; splendid washing quality; all sizes; special to-day..... $1.50

Basement.

The Store of To-Day and To-Morrow Kaufmann & Co. Where Fourth St. Meets Broad

Social and Personal

Miss Kathleen Bruce is the guest of Mrs. Frederik Page, at her home in Leesburg, for several days, where she has been much entertained. Miss Bruce was guest of honor at a tea on Friday afternoon given by her hostess, Mrs. Page, and was also entertained at a very handsome luncheon given by Mrs. Arthur Chichester. Both were very charming affairs, and decorations were in spring blossoms and roses.

Miss Bruce and Mrs. Page will leave this week to visit relatives in Fauquier County, and will spend a week at the Turner country place near The Plains.

Reception This Afternoon.
Mrs. William Hodges Mann will give a reception this afternoon in the Executive Mansion from 5 to 7 o'clock for the members of the Recreation Congress, now in session here. Only those attending the congress will be present, and no formal invitations have been issued. Receiving with Mrs. Mann will be the Mayor and Mrs. George Ainslie, Mrs. John Skelton Williams and Mrs. Herbert Mann.

Mrs. Mann will be gowned in black silk, made with an overdress of embroidered net, and will carry a bouquet of lilies of the valley. The receiving line will stand in the blue room, which will be decorated in spring blossoms and the state drawing-room will be arranged with vases of snapdragons and pink and white honeysuckle. In the dining-room a silver vase of American Beauty roses will be used as a centerpiece for the table.

Mr. and Mrs. Corley Entertain.
Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Corley were hosts at a supper given in the palm room of the Jefferson Hotel last evening in honor of the artists of the May Festival. Covers were laid for sixty-five, and the guests were seated at long tables arranged in a hollow square. Decorations were in slender vases of Richmond roses and white flowers scattered about the tables and the cloth. In the center of this square a temporary flower garden was arranged of palms and red roses. An orchestra played during the supper. A number of Richmond people were invited to meet the artists.

In Petersburg.
Miss Margaret Gilkeson, of Parkersburg, W. Va., is now in Petersburg, where she is the guest of Miss Hester Riddle before returning to her home.

Dunlop Flour
IT'S MADE IN RICHMOND
The Dunlop Mills, Richmond, Va.

The Velvet Hand
PURE ICE CREAM
Same Quality Every Day.
PURITY ICE CREAM
Monroe 1801.

Hopkins Furniture Co.
7 West Broad St.
Cash or Credit.

HAMMOND
"Flowers of Guaranteed Freshness."
Tel. Mad. 630.

Daisy Bread
AT ALL GROCERS
Save The Labels and Get Valuable Premiums
AMERICAN BREAD AND BAKING CO.
6 East Leigh Street.

Rountree-Sutherland-Cherry Corporation
The Latest in Ice Cream and Cakes from
Shepherd's New Factory
2008 W. Broad St. Call Mad. 7148

who so ably directed the musical cantata, "The Rose Maiden," in Ashland last month, the Ashland Choral Club, assisted by several Richmond artists, will repeat the entertainment on Monday, May 19, in the Jefferson Hotel Auditorium. The affair is to be given for the Church of the Holy Comforter. Mr. Stinsbury is choir-director and vestryman of this church and the members of the Ladies Aid Society will have charge of the arrangements for this function.

At the time of its presentation in Ashland, the cantata was a signal success. The music is particularly bright and attractive, and the solos unusually good. The Ashland Choral Club is an organization of forty trained voices, and the cantata, which will be accompanied by the orchestra, will be accompanied by the singers includes Mrs. S. B. Hequembourg, Miss Catherine Thurston, Frank Komarek, Sam Cowardin and Mrs. W. M. Lashar.

For Miss Twitty.
A recent Suffolk exchange contains the following of interest here, where Miss Twitty often visits friends:

"Mrs. J. Ross McNeal, trained and Saturday afternoon at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Phillips, at a tea and linen shower complimentary to Miss Sallie Twitty, who in June will be married to Alexander Graham Martin.

"The handsome Phillips home was decorated in mountain laurel, pink roses, peonies and masses of ferns and grasses with pink shaded lights.

"From the chandeliers hung by pink ribbons a shower of pink rosebuds.

"Mrs. McNeal was assisted in receiving by her sister, Mrs. Horace Whaley Phillips, and from the shower set in a bower of laurel punch was served by Mrs. W. H. Jones, Jr.

"As the guests arrived the gifts of linen were placed in a green umbrella, from the spokes and handle of which hung green ribbon and pink roses.

"When the guest of honor arrived, these dainty packages were literally 'showered' at her feet.

"The center-piece for the luncheon table was a pink shaded chandelabra, and four crystal vases of pink roses adorned the end. From the chandelier suspended pink satin hearts, decorated with pink satin hearts.

"The guests present were: Misses Sallie, Laura and Evelyn Twitty, Mrs. Frank Hobbs, of Petersburg; Misses Jordan, Florence Bell, Fannie Riddick, Leclair, King, Martha Jones, Hilah Kilby, Porter Eley, Louise Britt, Nell Jordan, Evelyn Hill, Virginia Jenkins, Phoebe Altman, Ellen Riddick, Susan Muckleroy, Susi Holland, Beatrix Holland, Katharine Brotherton, Helene, Gladys Dole, Virginia and Ethel Shoop, Lydia Day Eley and Ruth Marshall.

Members To-Day.
Miss Sadie American, of New York, national secretary of the Council of Jewish Women, will address the Richmond sections at Temple Beth Abaham, this evening at 8:15 o'clock. The public is cordially invited to hear Miss American.

There is to be a called meeting of Richmond Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, this morning at 11 o'clock in Lee Camp Hall. The meeting is for the purpose of distributing tickets for the moonlight excursion, and all members are asked to be present.

The play given by the Fairies of Freya this year was "The May Queen's Secret of Eternal Youth," and Miss Anna Muckleroy was its author. A large number of guests were at the play to witness the celebration, and refreshments were served following the play.

Entertained in Washington.
Mr. and Mrs. Frederik McElone, of Upperville, gave a luncheon in Washington on Monday at the Shoreham Hotel. The table was decorated in roses and snapdragons, and the guests included Miss Helen Buchanan, Miss Jeanette Allen, Miss Louise Bayne, Mrs. Archer Randolph, of the University of Virginia; Myron M. Parker, Jr., John R. White, of Richmond, and E. J. Gray.

Mr. and Mrs. McElone have been in Washington to attend the horse show. At the Woman's Club.

Members of the Woman's Club are looking forward with the greatest interest and pleasure to the address of Soumas MacManus, which will be made at the club to-morrow afternoon at 5 o'clock, with Mrs. John S. Munce as chairman. All who are acquainted with Mr. MacManus's Irish stories in the leading magazines or with his books, need hardly be told that he got his knowledge of the wit and humor and poetry and pathos of Irish life at first hand. From his cradle he looked out every day on the rugged mountains and cliffs of wave-lashed Donegal; he heard the Donegal cattle bells ringing around him the old legends, tales and songs of his people.

It is to be a charming privilege that the club members will have in hearing this gifted and widely-known man to-morrow afternoon and the parlors will be thronged with guests for the occasion.

Following Mr. MacManus's lecture a reception will be tendered the speaker. Mrs. Preston Cooke, Mrs. Julia Grant Moore, Mrs. John A. Cooke and Mrs. Charles Robins will pour tea, and Mrs. A. S. Morton, Mrs. T. Catesby Jones and Mrs. W. G. Stander will be at the coffee table. Wild flowers will decorate the club rooms and the young girls of the club will assist in serving the guests present.

Miss Keller to Lecture.
Miss Helen Keller will arrive in Richmond on Saturday to give a lecture under the direction of the American Association of the Virginia Randolph Ellet School. Miss Keller's lecture will be given in the auditorium of the Masonic Temple Saturday evening at 8:30 o'clock, and her subject will be "The Heart and the Hand: The Uses of the Senses." She will be accompanied by Mrs. Macey.

The Alumnae Association of Miss Ellet's School annually gives some sort of entertainment, and the chole Miss Keller this spring is an unusually happy one. A large audience will be present to hear this interesting woman.

Concerning Mrs. Harcum.
Mrs. O. Marvin Harcum, formerly Miss Edith Hatcher, of this city, who was recently married, has been continuing her musical successes in the Playhouse, where she has been giving a drawing-room recital last week at the home of one of the most influential music lovers in the West End of New York, and a large and enthusiastic audience was present.

On this evening Mrs. Harcum will give a recital at Bryn Mawr, Pa., and it is probable that she will be heard in Richmond some time this season.

Address by Miss Melvin.
Miss Melvin, of Maryland, a young woman celebrated for her work in behalf of recreational centres, and sent as a delegate and a speaker to the Playground Association, now meeting in Richmond, will give a public address in suffrage headquarters, 800 East Broad Street, Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock, to the Equal Suffrage League of Richmond, and Richmond people who are invited to be their guests and have the pleasure of listening to Miss Melvin.

Mrs. Valentine will introduce Miss Melvin and add interest to the occasion by telling of suffrage meetings in Petersburg and various near-by points to Richmond.

Repeat "Rose Maiden."
Out of compliment to R. C. Stinsbury,

REINACH, Inc.
107 E. BROAD STREET
MILLINERY—Women's and Misses' Outer Apparel.

Phoenix Guaranteed Silk Hose
in fast colors, 4 pair for $2.
Warranted to wear 3 months or new ones furnished free.

Dreyfus
"Specialists in Apparel for Women."
Broad at Second.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure

ROYAL—the most celebrated of all the baking powders in the world—celebrated for its great leavening strength and purity. It makes your cakes, biscuit, bread, etc., healthful, it insures you against alum and all forms of adulteration that go with the low priced brands.

BOGHOS NUBAR PASHA ON VISIT TO LONDON

Will Make Arrangement for Congress of Armenians to Draft Statement to Powers.

By LA MARQUETTE DE FONTENAY.
BOGHOS NUBAR PASHA, son of that celebrated Oriental statesman who, of Armenian birth, was the Prime Minister of Khedives Ismail and Tewfik, and on several occasions regent of Egypt during their absence in Europe, is at present in London for the purpose of making preliminary arrangements for a congress of Armenians, to draft a statement to be submitted to the great powers.

Nubar and his fellow leaders of the Armenian race lay great stress upon Sir Edward Grey's recent statement in the House of Commons, that the two cardinal points of Great Britain's policy are the territorial integrity of Turkey in Asia, and the solvency of the Ottoman Empire.

What they have in view is not the creation of an independent Armenian kingdom. They are perfectly satisfied to remain under Turkish rule, provided they can obtain a guarantee of recognition of their rights, and certain changes, the proposals made by the British, French and Russian governments in 1895, chief of which is the appointment of a European Christian governor by the Porte, on the nomination of the powers, and guarantees by the latter of administrative measures on the part of Turkey to secure justice for the Armenians against the Kurds. They point out that the future capacity of Turkey to discharge her financial obligations to Europe depends very largely upon the economic development of Armenia, which is the most active trading and industrial community under the Turkish flag.

In this movement Nubar is supported by the big and influential Armenian colonies in France, in England and in Egypt, as well as by the members of their race at Constantinople, where they play a very notable role in the haute finance, and in all commercial and industrial enterprises. There are very many Armenians in the world; so many, indeed, that several prosperous newspapers are being printed in the Armenian language over here for their use.

All sorts of legal trouble has arisen in connection with the disposal of the marvelous collection of paintings which had been left by the late Sir Henry Layard to his widow for life, and which adorned the walls of the Cappella Palace, whence it was removed until her death last year.

In the first place, there is a difference of opinion as to which of the paintings belong to the heirs of Sir Henry and Lady Layard, and which to the National Gallery in London. Moreover, the Italian government insists that, in the matter whether the paintings become the property of the National Gallery or of Sir Henry and Lady Layard's heirs, they cannot leave Venice, or rather I should say the Italian Kingdom, owing to the terms of the Pasca law.

Meanwhile the entire collection of pictures has been removed by the government authorities at Venice from the Cappella Palace to the City Museum, where they are placed under the care of Signor Fogolari, the director of the Royal Gallery of Painting in Italy, and of Dr. Sorinzi, the director of the museum. The pictures are all hung in one gallery, and their ultimate destination is one of the problems of the hour.

The terms of Sir Henry Layard's will are somewhat conflicting. One clause says, "the portraits in my gallery are to become the exclusive property of my heirs," chief among whom is Miss Olivia Blanche Du Cane, niece of the late Lady Layard, and actual owner of the Cappella Palace. But other clauses of the will direct that his pictures, including the world-famous portrait of the Turkish Sultan, Mohammed II., the conqueror of Constantinople, by the Venetian painter Gentile Bellini; the St. Ursula; by Carpaccio, so dear to Ruskin, and some beautiful examples of Watteau, of Moroni and of Beccafino, should pass to the British nation, for preservation in the National Gallery.

Now the heirs claim all the portraits, including those of Sultan Mohammed and others; whereas the National Gallery argues that the portraits bequeathed to the heirs are restricted to the portraits of Sir Henry Layard, of his wife and of one or two other members of the family; paintings of no particular artistic value.

How the matter will end it is difficult to say. At any rate, it will involve considerable litigation, as well as prolonged negotiations with the Italian government, which will certainly not consent to permit Bellini's painting of Sultan Mohammed leaving the Kingdom. It had been believed that Sir Henry, before his demise, made an agreement with the Italian government to surrender, in the case of his paintings, the action of the Pasca law.

law prohibiting the export of Old Masters; but the Italian authorities now deny that there was any understanding of this kind.

It may be remembered that at the time of Lady Layard's death, a story was current to the effect that she had some years previously been compelled by monetary embarrassment to sell the gems of her collection of paintings to J. Pierpont Morgan, stipulating that he should leave them in her possession until her death, before availing himself of his ownership to bring them to America, to display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. But this report likewise proved without foundation. For Lady Layard was a rich woman, being a sister of Lord Wimborne, and one of the heiresses of old Sir Josiah Guest, owner of the great Downham Ironworks in Glamorganshire.

A number of English newspapers, which should know better, describe the member of Parliament for Torquay, as heir to the peerage of her father, Lord Leith of Fyvie. This is not the case; and while Mrs. Burn, who is her parents' only surviving child, will inherit Fyvie Castle, in Aberdeenshire, and her parents' great wealth, the peerage of her father will become extinct on his death.

He was formerly a lieutenant in the royal navy, serving on board a ship of the Pacific squadron, and on the occasion of the warship to which he belonged touching at St. Louis, Mo., in 1870, at the time of the Franco-German War, he made the acquaintance, at a ball there, of the daughter of Derick A. January, the great iron and steel magnate, of St. Louis, Mo. In the following year he married Miss January at St. Louis, was induced by his American father-in-law to quit the royal navy and to join him in his business, and as an iron-master in this country amassed so large a fortune of his own that, soon after his marriage, he was able to retire from business, to take up his residence in England, and to purchase Fyvie Castle, the ancestral home of his family until the beginning of the sixteenth century. Moreover he managed to secure a peerage, as Lord Leith, of Fyvie Castle.

He lost his only son in the Boer War, and it is related that the news of his death was preceded by the apparition of the spectral Trumpeter of Fyvie, who, celebrated in many an ancient Scottish ballad, has always appeared on the eve of any calamity to the owners of the castle.

The castle is saddled with a curse, according to the terms of which it is never to be sold from father to son until the third of its "weeping stones" is recovered. The first of these stones is built into the castle, in a top room, and it weeps in bad weather, drying its tears when the sun reappears. The second weeping stone is built into a bridge over the river Ythan, which, famous for its pearls, flows close to the castle; while the third is popularly supposed to lie somewhere at the bottom of an alleged bottomless lake, in the folk-land of the castle.

One of the pearls of the river Ythan, found under the shadow of the walls of Fyvie Castle, is set in the crown of Scotland. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

law prohibiting the export of Old Masters; but the Italian authorities now deny that there was any understanding of this kind.

It may be remembered that at the time of Lady Layard's death, a story was current to the effect that she had some years previously been compelled by monetary embarrassment to sell the gems of her collection of paintings to J. Pierpont Morgan, stipulating that he should leave them in her possession until her death, before availing himself of his ownership to bring them to America, to display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. But this report likewise proved without foundation. For Lady Layard was a rich woman, being a sister of Lord Wimborne, and one of the heiresses of old Sir Josiah Guest, owner of the great Downham Ironworks in Glamorganshire.

A number of English newspapers, which should know better, describe the member of Parliament for Torquay, as heir to the peerage of her father, Lord Leith of Fyvie. This is not the case; and while Mrs. Burn, who is her parents' only surviving child, will inherit Fyvie Castle, in Aberdeenshire, and her parents' great wealth, the peerage of her father will become extinct on his death.

He was formerly a lieutenant in the royal navy, serving on board a ship of the Pacific squadron, and on the occasion of the warship to which he belonged touching at St. Louis, Mo., in 1870, at the time of the Franco-German War, he made the acquaintance, at a ball there, of the daughter of Derick A. January, the great iron and steel magnate, of St. Louis, Mo. In the following year he married Miss January at St. Louis, was induced by his American father-in-law to quit the royal navy and to join him in his business, and as an iron-master in this country amassed so large a fortune of his own that, soon after his marriage, he was able to retire from business, to take up his residence in England, and to purchase Fyvie Castle, the ancestral home of his family until the beginning of the sixteenth century. Moreover he managed to secure a peerage, as Lord Leith, of Fyvie Castle.

He lost his only son in the Boer War, and it is related that the news of his death was preceded by the apparition of the spectral Trumpeter of Fyvie, who, celebrated in many an ancient Scottish ballad, has always appeared on the eve of any calamity to the owners of the castle.

The castle is saddled with a curse, according to the terms of which it is never to be sold from father to son until the third of its "weeping stones" is recovered. The first of these stones is built into the castle, in a top room, and it weeps in bad weather, drying its tears when the sun reappears. The second weeping stone is built into a bridge over the river Ythan, which, famous for its pearls, flows close to the castle; while the third is popularly supposed to lie somewhere at the bottom of an alleged bottomless lake, in the folk-land of the castle.

One of the pearls of the river Ythan, found under the shadow of the walls of Fyvie Castle, is set in the crown of Scotland. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

law prohibiting the export of Old Masters; but the Italian authorities now deny that there was any understanding of this kind.

It may be remembered that at the time of Lady Layard's death, a story was current to the effect that she had some years previously been compelled by monetary embarrassment to sell the gems of her collection of paintings to J. Pierpont Morgan, stipulating that he should leave them in her possession until her death, before availing himself of his ownership to bring them to America, to display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. But this report likewise proved without foundation. For Lady Layard was a rich woman, being a sister of Lord Wimborne, and one of the heiresses of old Sir Josiah Guest, owner of the great Downham Ironworks in Glamorganshire.

A number of English newspapers, which should know better, describe the member of Parliament for Torquay, as heir to the peerage of her father, Lord Leith of Fyvie. This is not the case; and while Mrs. Burn, who is her parents' only surviving child, will inherit Fyvie Castle, in Aberdeenshire, and her parents' great wealth, the peerage of her father will become extinct on his death.

He was formerly a lieutenant in the royal navy, serving on board a ship of the Pacific squadron, and on the occasion of the warship to which he belonged touching at St. Louis, Mo., in 1870, at the time of the Franco-German War, he made the acquaintance, at a ball there, of the daughter of Derick A. January, the great iron and steel magnate, of St. Louis, Mo. In the following year he married Miss January at St. Louis, was induced by his American father-in-law to quit the royal navy and to join him in his business, and as an iron-master in this country amassed so large a fortune of his own that, soon after his marriage, he was able to retire from business, to take up his residence in England, and to purchase Fyvie Castle, the ancestral home of his family until the beginning of the sixteenth century. Moreover he managed to secure a peerage, as Lord Leith, of Fyvie Castle.

He lost his only son in the Boer War, and it is related that the news of his death was preceded by the apparition of the spectral Trumpeter of Fyvie, who, celebrated in many an ancient Scottish ballad, has always appeared on the eve of any calamity to the owners of the castle.

The castle is saddled with a curse, according to the terms of which it is never to be sold from father to son until the third of its "weeping stones" is recovered. The first of these stones is built into the castle, in a top room, and it weeps in bad weather, drying its tears when the sun reappears. The second weeping stone is built into a bridge over the river Ythan, which, famous for its pearls, flows close to the castle; while the third is popularly supposed to lie somewhere at the bottom of an alleged bottomless lake, in the folk-land of the castle.

One of the pearls of the river Ythan, found under the shadow of the walls of Fyvie Castle, is set in the crown of Scotland. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

law prohibiting the export of Old Masters; but the Italian authorities now deny that there was any understanding of this kind.

It may be remembered that at the time of Lady Layard's death, a story was current to the effect that she had some years previously been compelled by monetary embarrassment to sell the gems of her collection of paintings to J. Pierpont Morgan, stipulating that he should leave them in her possession until her death, before availing himself of his ownership to bring them to America, to display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. But this report likewise proved without foundation. For Lady Layard was a rich woman, being a sister of Lord Wimborne, and one of the heiresses of old Sir Josiah Guest, owner of the great Downham Ironworks in Glamorganshire.

A number of English newspapers, which should know better, describe the member of Parliament for Torquay, as heir to the peerage of her father, Lord Leith of Fyvie. This is not the case; and while Mrs. Burn, who is her parents' only surviving child, will inherit Fyvie Castle, in Aberdeenshire, and her parents' great wealth, the peerage of her father will become extinct on his death.

He was formerly a lieutenant in the royal navy, serving on board a ship of the Pacific squadron, and on the occasion of the warship to which he belonged touching at St. Louis, Mo., in 1870, at the time of the Franco-German War, he made the acquaintance, at a ball there, of the daughter of Derick A. January, the great iron and steel magnate, of St. Louis, Mo. In the following year he married Miss January at St. Louis, was induced by his American father-in-law to quit the royal navy and to join him in his business, and as an iron-master in this country amassed so large a fortune of his own that, soon after his marriage, he was able to retire from business, to take up his residence in England, and to purchase Fyvie Castle, the ancestral home of his family until the beginning of the sixteenth century. Moreover he managed to secure a peerage, as Lord Leith, of Fyvie Castle.

He lost his only son in the Boer War, and it is related that the news of his death was preceded by the apparition of the spectral Trumpeter of Fyvie, who, celebrated in many an ancient Scottish ballad, has always appeared on the eve of any calamity to the owners of the castle.

The castle is saddled with a curse, according to the terms of which it is never to be sold from father to son until the third of its "weeping stones" is recovered. The first of these stones is built into the castle, in a top room, and it weeps in bad weather, drying its tears when the sun reappears. The second weeping stone is built into a bridge over the river Ythan, which, famous for its pearls, flows close to the castle; while the third is popularly supposed to lie somewhere at the bottom of an alleged bottomless lake, in the folk-land of the castle.

One of the pearls of the river Ythan, found under the shadow of the walls of Fyvie Castle, is set in the crown of Scotland. (Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

law prohibiting the export of Old Masters; but the Italian authorities now deny that there was any understanding of this kind.

It may be remembered that at the time of Lady Layard's death, a story was current to the effect that she had some years previously been compelled by monetary embarrassment to sell the gems of her collection of paintings to J. Pierpont Morgan, stipulating that he should leave them in her possession until her death, before availing himself of his ownership to bring them to America, to display in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. But this report likewise proved without foundation. For Lady Layard was a rich woman, being a sister of Lord Wimborne, and one of the heiresses of old Sir Josiah Guest, owner of the great Downham Ironworks in Glamorganshire.

A number of English newspapers, which should know better, describe the member of Parliament for Torquay, as heir to the peerage of her father, Lord Leith of Fyvie. This is not the case; and while Mrs. Burn, who is her parents' only surviving child, will inherit Fyvie Castle, in Aberdeenshire, and her parents' great wealth, the peerage of her father will become extinct on his death.

He was formerly a lieutenant in the royal navy, serving on board a ship of the Pacific squadron, and on the occasion of the warship to which he belonged touching at St. Louis, Mo., in 1870, at the time of the Franco-German War, he made the acquaintance, at a ball there, of the daughter of Derick A. January, the great iron and steel magnate, of St. Louis, Mo. In the following year he married Miss January at St. Louis, was induced by his American father-in-law to quit the royal navy and to join him in his business, and as an iron-master in this country amassed so large a fortune of his own that, soon after his marriage, he was able to retire from business, to take up his residence in England, and to purchase Fyvie Castle, the ancestral home of his family until the beginning of the sixteenth century. Moreover he managed to secure a peerage, as Lord Leith, of Fyvie Castle.

He lost his only son in the Boer War, and it is related that the news of his death was preceded by the apparition of the spectral Trumpeter of Fyvie, who, celebrated in many an ancient Scottish ballad, has always appeared on the eve of any calamity to the owners of the castle.

The castle is saddled with a curse, according to the terms of which it is never to be sold from father to son until the third of its "weeping stones" is recovered. The first of these stones is built into the castle, in a top room, and it weeps in bad weather, drying its tears when the sun reappears. The second weeping stone is built into a bridge over the river Ythan, which, famous for its pearls, flows close to the castle; while the third is popularly supposed to lie somewhere at the bottom of an alleged bottomless lake, in the folk-land of the castle.

UNKNOWN MOTIVE EXCEPT JEALOUSY

Killing of Young Meade Hanes by Mott R. Glover Stirs Buckingham County.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Arvonia, Va., May 6.—The funeral of young Meade Hanes, son of Blackwell Hanes, who was shot dead yesterday by Mott Robertson Glover, was held at the home of his father this afternoon at 4 o'clock, a large number of people flocking to the funeral from various sections of the county to offer sympathy to the stricken parents.

The tragedy was one of the most remarkable ever heard of in this section of Virginia. The whole matter was fully ventilated over the various telephone lines of the county last night, and it appears that the details are about as follows: Young Meade Hanes, though a boy of about fifteen or sixteen years of age, was paying boyish attentions to a young woman, a near neighbor, about his age, or possibly younger. His rival, if he could be said to have a rival, was Mott Robertson Glover, a man in the neighborhood of thirty years of age. It is told here that Glover had invited the young girl to ride with him in his buggy a few weeks ago, but that she refused, saying she would prefer to walk with young Meade Hanes. Later she again showed preference for young Hanes. That is all that can possibly be gathered at this time of any ill-will which might have existed between the two boys.

Yesterday, while Blackwell Hanes, the boy's father, was at Buckingham Courthouse attending a good roads meeting, young Meade Hanes, with the assistance of a hired man, was engaged in plowing and cleaning up a field near his home. While he with a mattock was cutting down some bushes his companion with the plow saw a man approach on horseback and fire was exchanged. The boy fell, and his companion ran to notify the family, but when they arrived the boy was dead, or died in a few minutes thereafter. Three of the five shots took effect in the boy's back, piercing his vital organs.

Mott Glover then deliberately rode to Buckingham Courthouse, where a large number of the county's citizens were gathered, and gave himself up to the sheriff, saying he had killed a man. Blackwell Hanes, the father, was at that time in the courtroom listening to a good roads speech, and when he was taken aside and told of the horrible tragedy he collapsed and had to be carried to his buggy and driven home.

No motive whatever is known for the murder except jealousy on the part of Mott Glover. It is reported that he has already employed Senator O. B. Gayle as counsel, and will also employ an array of counsel for his defense.

Both families stand high in the county. They have wide connections on every side, and there are hundreds of kindred kinsmen in the families in the county and adjoining counties.

Charles L. Glover, father of the slayer of young Hanes, is a man of the highest type. His children have married into some of the most prominent families in the county. Both the mother and father are men of high repute and have far-reaching family connections, all prominent and most respectable.

The tragedy has cast a gloom over the entire county, every citizen expressing the greatest sympathy with both families in their trouble.

The matter will undoubtedly be taken up at the May term of the Buckingham court, and a day then set for the commencement of the trial. It is probable that the trial will be the most memorable in the history of the county since the Woolbridge trial of nine years ago. As the connections of Glover are wealthy, it is expected that the best counsel in Virginia will be employed to defend him.

FIVE VIEWERS APPOINTED.
Will Recommend Matter of Railway Crossing Near Williamsburg.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Williamsburg, Va., May 6.—The James City County Board of Supervisors held a meeting here to-day. Other than routine matters, the only item of importance before the board was the matter of a railway crossing just east of the city, on the boundary line between York and James City. The York board recommended by E. A. Powers, The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company was represented by Attorney S. O. Bland, of Newport News, and Engineer W. B. Isaacs, of Richmond.

A number of people were present, and an overhead bridge at this point, but it is claimed by the railroad company that such a bridge is not feasible, owing to the grade, and that it is very expensive, costing in the neighborhood of $10,000, one-half of which would have to be borne by the two counties affected.

Five viewers were appointed—L. W. Roberts and Henley Hubbard, from York, and T. H. Strickler, A. A. Harwood and B. S. Scott, from James City—to make a report at the next meeting of the board in June.

Lancaster, W. Hunt, mail carrier on rural route No. 3, was thrown from his motorcycle while carrying his mail last Saturday and was badly bruised about the chest and had several teeth knocked out. He was able to work his